A photograph of a small, rustic stone building, likely a cemetery marker or a small chapel. The building features a gabled roof where the gable end is constructed from stacked stones. The main walls are also made of stone. A white, paneled door is visible on the right side. A stone plaque with the year '1902' is mounted on the wall above the door. A semi-transparent text box is overlaid on the center of the image.

The image shows the ornate wrought-iron main gate of Central Cemetery. The gate features intricate scrollwork and a central panel with the words "CENTRAL CEMETERY" in raised, gold-colored letters. In the foreground, two large, reddish-brown stone pillars with decorative finials stand on either side of the gate. The ground is covered in a layer of snow, and several gravestones are visible in the background. Tall evergreen trees form a dense backdrop behind the cemetery.

A photograph of a columbarium, a place for the burial of the dead. The structure is built with low, curved stone walls and is surrounded by green grass. In the background, there are trees and a hillside. A semi-transparent black rectangle is overlaid on the center of the image, containing white text. The text reads "FINALLY, THE 6TH TITLE" in a large, bold, sans-serif font, and "First burial at the Columbarium" in a smaller, regular, sans-serif font below it. The overall scene is peaceful and well-maintained.
